Abstract

The difficulties we face in understanding the complete nature and origin of life through scientific discipline suggest that science alone, in its present form, is not sufficient to understand life. A new science that includes subjective aspect of reality and which is open to the spiritual and traditional wisdom on life is necessary to comprehend meaningfully the real nature of life. We present a way in which this new science can incorporate traditional wisdom. We also present the Vedic understanding of life to be considered for integrating into such a new science.
